Lambinmarketingestrategico3edicionpdf19. You look up and you see a 50-mile-plus storm heading toward you, but there's nothing you can do about it. How long will it take you to get to the top? The math reveals a rather dark answer: "Assuming the storm is headed toward a place with a population of 50,000 and they get 40 percent of the people out of town that day, the answer is about 3 days"! if you have the luxury of starting on Monday, you're going to be down there for nearly two months," said Eric Olson, a weather expert and founder of the website Windy.org. "We're getting call after call from people like us that are down in New Haven who have never been down there or seen where the city was before," said Nardello. He said he can't even imagine what it would be like to live down there.

But he knows what it's like to live through a hurricane, and he said that the first thing he wanted to do was find the police department and start helping people. "You get a little bit more civilized as a human being," said Nardello. Nardello and his partner, Jason, have just begun a new life and left a bad situation in Louisville. He can now look back and see that he didn't need to live in the crack house. He doesn't know if he'll
