Q: Trying to catch a keyboard shortcut in Excel VBA I've written code to catch a shortcut in Excel (Win XP). My shortcut opens an Excel workbook.

Code: Option Explicit Private Sub Application_CutCopyMode(ByVal mode As CutCopyMode) Select Case mode Case 0 MsgBox "C is not supported" Case 2 MsgBox "C is not supported" End Select End Sub

Problem is, this code only works when there is already a document open. I thought

---

I could perhaps catch it as the Excel application is starting, but that doesn't work. Any ideas? Thanks.

A: While there's no "official" way to intercept the CTRL+C or CTRL+X shortcuts, you can do some creative indirect methods. Using the Windows API, you can for example intercept the Win32 SelectFile and SendKeys messages. Using either SelectFile() or SendKeys() will require a managed COM component. Most of the Component Object Model (COM) components that let you interact with

Windows from VBA are best avoided, unfortunately. There are two components that you can use: Microsoft Forms 2.0 Type Library Microsoft Forms 2.0 Type Library Code Library There is also a third COM component which is known as UIAutomation. It's designed to let you automate the interaction of UIAutomation classes. In particular, UIAutomationElement seems like it could be of interest to your problem. A: You can't (easily) detect these keypress events until a window actually exists. If you
