As you stand inside Porta dos Sete Passos, the entrance to Lisbon's Convento do Carmo, you are in Portugal's oldest house of prayer. Built between 1460 and 1480, it's one of the first buildings in Europe to incorporate the imposing Gothic concept of stone vaults, and a first for Portugal. A visit to this church is a trip back in time to the days when there was only one, unified monarchy covering the Iberian Peninsula. The Convento dos Carmo is a rambling structure with five chapels. The largest is the capela do Carmo, or chapel of Our Lady of Carmo. It dates back to the early 14th century, during Portugal's medieval period. Two years after the chapel was completed, the convent was added. (Portugal on a Budget readers: Take a virtual tour of the Convento do Carmo and learn more about its history here) The Carmelites of Portugal, a religious order that was founded in the 13th century by the Marques de Abrantes, a nobleman from Galicia, live at the Convento. During the 1500s, João II extended the church and built a small cloister for the monks. In 1755, an earthquake destroyed a good portion of the convent, but a few years later, the chapel was rebuilt. (Portugal on a Budget readers: The Convento do Carmo was expanded by the Jesuits when they ruled Portugal) While Portugal may not be the only country to develop in this fashion, unlike other Gothic buildings in Europe, this one is not whitewashed over. Some of the original walls remain visible under layers of later renovations. As you walk through the chapel, Portuguese and European musicians perform sacred music throughout the year. The chapel is open daily except for major Catholic holidays. (Portugal on a Budget readers: 14 Churches you shouldn't miss in Europe) You've made it to Lisbon! There is still plenty to see. Bitcoin scam images are spreading all over the Internet The latest victim of an online bitcoin scam is a retired police officer from Montana named Jesse James. In his case the scammer even provided a photo of his face. James tried to buy some bitcoins with an e-Transfer, but he didn't receive the money. When he tried to figure out what had happened, he came across this story. The scammer claimed he was from "Bitcoine" and used the meme image as a "login" on his e-transfer. Shortly after he made the purchase, he said, his computer crashed, and his payment was not processed because his computer lost power. Blockchain Bitcoin scam shows up on the news Bitcoin scam images, like this one below, have been popping up all over the Internet. They are often accompanied by a message that says "This is a bitcoin scam" and encourages victims to log onto their e-transfer and check if their money was already sent to them. The scammers are taking advantage of a new system for transferring money on the internet, called blockchain. The system allows people to send money over the web for as little as a few cents or as much as a few dollars. However, the system does not guarantee that the payment will reach the recipient. The issue is that the system is unsecured, which makes it an easy target for fraudsters. Bitcoin scam images It is not an easy task to identify which ones of the many "scam images" are fake. Many of them are just images of the "scammer" pretending to be someone else. The real scam image is usually not shown, just the company or the e-transfer site. The scammer is most likely using a computer program to make the images appear to be the real thing. "The name and the picture are taken from Google. The name is embedded in the logo," the scammer tells Jesse James. "Kind of interesting that they want to use my image for their scam," Jesse James writes in the comments. "What stops them from just taking someone else's image and using that? That may be the best method for generating new business." Scammers are well aware of this weakness. "If I were to steal someone's photo, I would have
