Never Miss A Shot! The Rounds in Range Royale are timed. Timed? Yes, accurate shooting is everything in battle. Our reactive rounds will give you that vital second to line up your shot, then hit the target. Each game round is made up of three critical timings: - ROUNDTIME - When the rounds are exchanged - READY-TIMER - When you press the trigger - TARGETREADY - When the target is fully uncovered and ready for your shot Your ROUNDTIME and READY-TIMER are permanently locked for each round. This allows you to focus on perfecting your timing. Your TARGETREADY is only locked until you click the button to start shooting. This allows you to race into your targets if you are faster. At the same time, it also gives you a chance to adjust your aim if you are slower. If you miss, your target will be covered for the next round. If you miss after that, you won't be able to shoot in that round. Hitting Your Target To hit your target you'll need to penetrate its cover, with 0-1 hit (head, chest, legs) to the center of mass. This doesn't matter in the Timed mode, but in the Solo mode you get a single hit point. Each target is further divided into the three parts of the body. A bullseye is a single hit. Use your timings to hit your target in the chest, knees, and legs. Chest (Hips) - Shoot for where the best concealment is. Your chest-shots can penetrate any cover. Knees - The fastest-moving part of your body, your knees travel rapidly. Therefore, your best bet is to target the legs. Legs - The legs are large targets, and therefore, are most vulnerable. When possible, aim for the legs of the "lobster" portion of the target. You get one shot each. The best order is as follows: Chest Knees Legs That last shot of a leg is a chest shot. If you miss the chest, at least you will stop that joint. Tap For Aim Timed Mode In timed mode you have a limited window of time to rack up rounds. The timer resets when you get a headshot or miss. This means you only have a certain number of attempts. Single-Shot Mode When

Range Royale is a competitive shooting game where accuracy matters. The more accurate your shots are, the better your score. Games range from short to long range. Cheer Your Score The first-person field of view gives you a clear line of sight over long distances. That clear line of sight also gives you the ability to see your own muzzle flashes, flares, and the impact points of your own and your opponent's bullets. Either way, you need accuracy to get good at this game. The Range Depending on the game, there are ranges with varying levels of protection: Protected ranges that make it hard for your opponent to get shots off at you. Non-Protected ranges that put your opponent's shots on target, but make it easy to line up with them and get shots off. Our Target Range and Speed Shooter modes offer the most protection possible as they place a zone in front of you that makes your opponent's shots on target extremely hard to get. The Rounds Are Up All of your rounds on target are down at the end of each round. You need to keep up your accuracy and make shots while avoiding a major over- or under-shoot. The Target Range Hit the bullseye and you'll be awarded points. Miss a target and you'll be taken out. As you make progress, you'll unlock more rounds, different mods, and more awesome weapons and you'll have a ton of replayability. Tips: Aim Left Aiming down the sight axis generally accounts for the crosshair centering on a target. Aiming Left When you put the crosshair on a target, move the crosshair to the right side of the red target. Aim Right Aiming right accounts for the crosshair centering on a target. Aim Right When you put the crosshair on a target, move the crosshair to the left side of the red target. Aim High Position the crosshair on a target to help your opponent's bullets fly over your head. It's great for keeping a low profile when you're hiding behind cover. Aim Low Position the crosshair on a target to keep your opponent's bullets hitting the ground where you stand. It can put your life in a whole new perspective as you duck behind cover, ready to fire the moment they make their next move. Take The Aim Down The Sight Axis! The sight axis is where the crosshair travels along your scope, in this way d41b202975

Ya boy shot the full episode yesterday using his Black Magic Camera rig. We will be doing a Sports Bar Shootout soon using the Blue Talon. It will feature the handgun and several larger caliber handguns. I would also like to thank the publishers, "ModernFirearms.com" for the range time we had as well as the safety gear. Video includes the following: Cy's Rifle: Black Shadow 12ga. Kel Tec: Crowbar .40 G&S Beretta: 92FS Mossberg: 500 12ga., Shotgun: Rem 700 Plain Clothes Range G&S Shotgun: 13ga. Full face mask, eye protection and ear protection Hot spots and spotter - I don't own them so they were borrowed. Good luck and have fun out there. published:30 Nov 2015 views:73821 CJ's Bar Range Show! New Range, new gun and more, plus a brand new Blue Talon! From the summer open season down at CJ's Bar to now! Check it out! published:13 Aug 2017 views:26931 Battle Royale Sniper Mastermode and Deathmatch - the best of the best, and a lot of fun to play as well! Jump over the enemies and headshot them! They are mad with anger and want to kill you! Sniper Mastermode: Try to stay calm, quiet and objective! Deadlock - a game of survival. You don't just want to survive, you want to win! Each round the population increases by one, increasing the enemy difficulty. Once the timer hits zero the round is over. TargetMaster - The best of the best of the best - only elite sniper mastermode would be this challenging! You need to focus and make every shot count, from long distance and from a moving vehicle, or get hit! Deathmatch - Aim down the sights or through the scope to engage! Kill or be killed! Who will come out on top? Who will survive to see another day? Disclaimer: Ranges appear to have limited availability and may be hard to find or come with special request. ## What's new in Gamer Sensei's Range Royale:

G'day, folks. Just wanted to drop by and wish you all a very Superb G'day. Sad news for this morning. The long-time (sigh) and allegedly consummate class-act, Sensei Mori, died last week, having been at death's door since early last year. Those of you who have read the archives at TOCON know that I met him at the JSCKK event last year, and became acquainted with him after the first issue of The Oregonian, where he was moonlighting as a columnist. He was smart, witty, oh so well-read, and had an endless memory for quotations, facts and statistics (which in my opinion is a better qualification for being a columnist than a day-job commentator). I regret that he didn't have much time to do more of the same, but the many of us that do have been grateful for all that he's been doing. Most of us sense that Sensei Mori was well-known to a subset of our readers, but not necessarily as a household name. His had spent decades covering unlikely venues - who would have thought that the marathon runner Tim Blair could kick a much harder field goal at the State Games than at the NFL drafts? His had been one of the best commentator on the TQTS roadtrip back in the day, and his efforts to keep us informed, not only here, but on his very first professional gig for the Vancouver Sun. He lived to share his love of the genre, and to read your letters. In his last couple of years, he would often mention that the thing about both of us, is that we got more out of the fandom than he did from it. We got the stuff he cared the most about from the genre itself, and he got it through us. For those of you who may not have met, let me take a moment to introduce to you a gentle, honourable gent who gave more of himself to the genre than almost any of us, and who has been making the stuff we love better for more than four decades.
