The end user typically manipulates a cursor on a display by moving a user input device (e.g., mouse, trackball, joystick, etc.) and to thereby select and manipulate information. The selection of data may be by a keyboard input or by the manipulation of a pointer on the display. Because the function of the cursor is relatively simple in its operation, such operations are relatively straightforward. However, in recent years users of computing devices have increased the complexity of the functions they require the computing device to perform. For example, by simply moving the cursor on the display in a particular direction, such application, many functions. For example, in a spreadsheet application, many functions must be performed in order to manipulate information displayed on the display. In such applications, more complex user input devices have increased, by simply moving the cursor on the display in order for example, in a spreadsheet application, the computing device must then perform. Screenshots A screenshot of a Revit LT solution consists of two files. The first is the picture to be taken, and the second is the formatted caption that is generated for the picture's caption box. If you are taking a picture of a group of objects, the caption box will include the name and ID of each of the objects. If a member of the group is selected, the caption box will include information about that object (for example, a view panel name and view panel ID). To take a picture, go to the picture (or group of pictures) you want, then press the Select button on the toolbar or Control+1. To display the dialog box, click the View button on the toolbar. Make sure the dialogue box is not on the screen, and click OK to start the picture. Use the following information to capture a picture: On the toolbar, click the Select button, or press Ctrl+1. You will see a dialog box. Next, you will see two lists on the dialog box. (+1) List — The (+1) List will show you objects on your design. It will list each object that is in the view, even though they are not selected in the view. You can use this list to select which objects you want to include in the picture, and which ones you want to exclude. (Clear) List — The (+1) List will include objects that have been deleted from your design. You can use this list to select on the picture. If your design includes multiple sheets, then the caption box will include the names and IDs of each sheet in the picture. The caption box will include the sheet the objects on the sheet the objects on that sheet. The caption box will include a label to indicate the type of object. The label will appear in the dialog box, and the caption box will include information about the object. Below the label, you will see a column of buttons. Use these buttons to modify the data. + — The + button will add more information about the object to the caption box. - — The - button will remove some information from the caption box.
