Using git alias, I want to run git commit -a after git pull. I tried to alias like this: [alias] commit = "git commit -a" I also tried: [alias] commit = "!git commit -a" Still, after pull, it prompts me if I want to commit. How can I remove the prompt? A: Instead of using an alias, you can use a function instead to get all those warnings handled for you: function commit() { "run all the git commit commands, completely automatically" } The alias is more for things you might want to do after the first commit, such as changing commit message or switching to a new branch. A: Git pull pushes commit --allow-empty-message which is on by default. (The -a parameter I believe is for "all paths".) See git-pull --help. In a part of the world where daylight saving

Distress tolerance skills training in obese men: I. Treatment efficacy. Although there is evidence that increases in distress tolerance skills are associated with decreases in stress-related symptomatology, there is limited research documenting distress tolerance skills training as an effective treatment for stress-related conditions, particularly in obese men. The present study aimed to determine the efficacy of an 8-week, intensive, group training program in stress tolerance skills (distress tolerance skills [DTS] training) for obese men suffering from elevated levels of psychological distress due to experiencing a chronic job stressor. Participants were 28 obese men, with a BMI greater than 30 kg/m<sup>2</sup>, who were identified as experiencing anxiety, depressive, or physical symptoms associated with their elevated psychological distress. Results indicated statistically significant improvements in the DTS-AQ following treatment, and that changes in DTS skills were related to improvements in both anxiety and depressive symptoms.
