The actin cytoskeleton has emerged as a key regulator of cell survival and apoptosis, signaling critical signals during cell signaling events. The long-term goal of the proposed research is to understand the function of the actin cytoskeleton during signal transduction and apoptosis, particularly the mechanisms by which key signaling proteins and actin-based cytoskeletal elements influence each other. The mammalian Wiskott-Aldrich syndrome protein (WASP) is a conserved hematopoietic cytoskeletal regulator that has recently been implicated in apoptosis. Studies performed in a WASP-deficient cell line revealed that WASP is required for Fas-induced death, however the molecular mechanisms remain unknown. The proposed research will investigate whether WASP is required for death receptor-mediated apoptosis in W cells, and whether WASP might mediate its effects via actin nucleation and/or microfilament elongation. The specific aims are: (1) To determine the apoptotic pathway in the W cell line that is dependent on WASP, (2) To study the role of WASP in T cell receptor (TCR) signaling, (3) To determine if WASP inactivation affects T cell receptor-mediated actin nucleation and morphology, and (4) To investigate the effect of WASP on cytolysis and apoptosis in vivo. The wasp mutant in this study will be generated using a gene-targeting strategy designed to disrupt the endogenous WASP gene. To functionally dissect the role of WASP in Fas-induced apoptosis, the WASP mutant will be stably transfected into the W cell line. The mutant cells will be studied for their cellular phenotypes and for their requirements for caspase activation, and for Fas
