term dietary administration of methylsulfonylmethane to rats on hepatic glutathione, oxidized and reduced glutathione and glutathione-related enzymes. It is known that dietary supplementation of methylsulfonylmethane (MSM) increases liver glutathione (GSH) levels and decreases hepatic activities of glutathione-related enzymes in rats. We have therefore been investigating the effects of long-term administration of MSM on total and oxidized GSH and glutathione-related enzymes in rats.
Male Wistar rats received diets containing 0, 1, 3, or 6 g/kg of MSM in the form of LSM for 10 days.
The hepatic and renal GSH levels increased significantly at doses of 1 and 3 g/kg of MSM as compared to the control animals. Treatment with 6 g/kg of MSM caused a significant reduction in hepatic GSH in rats. Hepatic activities of glutathione peroxidase, glutathione reductase, and glucose-6-phosphate dehydrogenase were also significantly increased at 1 and 3 g/kg of MSM.
Ascorbate oxidase and glutathione-S-transferase activities were not affected by the administration of MSM. The results indicate that long-term administration of MSM to rats can increase hepatic GSH levels and may therefore be useful in protection against oxidative damage.6 3 8 8 C a
