The rules are simple: Fill the city up with resources and take over the other faction's city. New resources will then start to appear on the streets as cards are gained. Follow your opponent's movements and gain the upper hand. Play your cards well and you'll take over the city and earn victory points.

Features: - Build your city up with the resources you need to acquire. - Stop your opponent from draining your resources. - Add buildings to the city. - Collect cards from cards that are left on the board. - Upgrade cards for different effects. - Battle against your opponent.

About the Developer: This game was made by Group AT and is part of the AppPillar European Games Contest 2012. In this episode we talk about Good & Bad and fixing those. Finally, we take a look at the new #CardsOnPhone update (including some info on the iPhone 7). It is a great and challenging card game that combines elements of the video game (puzzle game) genre with a card game. Player is on the hunt for three powerful talismans known as "Charms" that will allow him to defeat his arch enemy. About this game: When you open the game your card deck is empty, and you have no real choice but to start as a beginner. Each level introduces a new kind of card and gameplay. Join the sorcerers brother in his fight against his arch-enemy and try to prevent him from stealing the three Charms. More than 170 cards are available, 52 special cards and cards in eight colors.

What's new:

The darkness. The stark, pallid circle encircling the Professor and his old friend, the Necromancer, prompting them to speak their prayers to Lanalia, the God of the Void. A week ago, the Necromancer would have spat on the Professor's green skin, assuming his ground was even cleaner than he already did. Now that the truth was brought out into the light of day, he is afraid. As they speak their prayers, the Necromancer has removed the cloak from his evil apprentice Raven, that is, he robbed a Necromantean of all that she was and transformed her into a sightless monster that chases the Professor and wants his blood. In the sky, Sigtudar, Galan, Trixus, and a host of other good souls are gathered and getting ready to come back to this world. One of them puts their paws on the gate as if to impart instructions, then the door's light flash upon them. When the others come to confront the beast left behind by the god of death, they find a few other souls amongst the remains: my man Ixon to name one, and Sorby the Cygnian Thane of Coram. Sigtudar holds her in his arms as he promises her that what she has seen will help shape her new purpose in life, and that one day her flame will rise again, just like it had before. He imparts the words that will send her into a cell, a jail, and a quest for knowledge. I make my way down to my room and settle in.

I have become used to getting up in the middle of the night, having to deal with my muses... but they aren't the only ones going to their appointed hours. Calidus is working in there and he likes to wake me up every so often, for my own good, of course. Pulling my taser out of my pocket, I set it to stun for when I feel he is going to do it anyways. Oh, how I'd love to wake this man up, but I've been told not to point that thing in his direction unless it is to save his life and no lesser offense. I made my way to school, wondering if I would run into Netyuk. Instead, I saw Calidus and Disar. "Hey," I greeted them. "Hey," they responded at
