AdvertisementToday we continue our journey through Twitter API methods. We'll look at the one-way method polluting the datasets for all the time. The process is already long, and it will only continue. Go on, let's learn. But let's first go over some basic information. The Twitter API allows you to 1. Return all the text messages in a user's timeline 2. Return all the followers of a user 3. Retrieve the followers of a user and all their text messages 4. Query by keyword 5. Retrieve the 10 most recent messages from a user, with a maximum of up to 50 6. Retrieve the most recent 10 messages from a user and their followers 7. Retrieve messages from a user which have been mentioned by other users. This post will only be focusing on Twitter User. But feel free to join our Slack to discuss API design and architecture. We want to store all the tweets that a user has liked. We want to store all the tweets that a user has retweeted. We want to store all the tweets that a user has favorited. Let's begin with creating a schema to store a list of Twitter user ID's: user_id:string Note that these are the 1 and 2-character unique IDs of each user. Which means there are 27,177,312,582,656 unique IDs, and all of them will be added here. A User can have many followers, and a user can have many friends. Suppose for a user x, his followers are a, b, c and his friends are d, e, f. A User has many Tweets, and a user has many TweetsLike. So, we have the following database schema: Followers:user_id,count Friends:user_id,count Tweets:user_id,text,created_at TweetsLikes:user_id,user_id,item_id,like_status,created_at This will create a user table, and three additional tables. But before we continue, let's define a basic Twitter type. The four basic type of Tweets are: 1. Direct messages 2. Mentions 3. 05a79cecff

The Clone Stamp Brushes are one of the most common tools in Photoshop. They can be used for various effects, including compositing, painting, erasing and retouching images. The Clone Stamp allows you to copy pixels from one area of an image and paste them into another area. This is useful for repairing damaged or corrupt images. Brushes are typically used by painting shapes on a canvas, but there are special brushes that are useful for specific purposes, such as retouching images or cleaning up a composition. You can open them from the Tool Palette (Window | Preferences | Tools | Brush): To paint with a brush, click the Brush tool to the left of the Tool Palette, then double-click to open the Brush Picker. In the Brush Picker, select the Brush Tool (it looks like a paint can or brush), then click and drag on the canvas to open the Brush Tool Options bar. Under the Tool Options bar, click the Bristles button to open the Bristles panel. The Bristles panel contains settings for controlling the brush, including brush size, opacity, spacing, and direction. The Size and Opacity options in the Bristles panel are different from the Brush Size and Opacity options that you might see in other panels. You can adjust these settings independently. The other settings in the Bristles panel are the same as those for brushes in other panels. This means that you can drag these settings to control the brush settings in other panels. For instance, you can drag the settings from the Bristles panel to the Brush panel. This is the Bristles panel for a flat pen brush. To specify the Bristles panel, click the appropriate button in the Bristles panel to select it: To start painting with the brush, select an area on the canvas, then click the Brush tool (you'll notice a yellow border around the Brush tool). The brush will immediately paint with the settings in the Bristles panel. When you paint with a brush, it's always good to have your canvas on a separate layer from your image. Select the canvas layer in the Layers panel, then choose Layer | New | Layer From Current Painting to create a new layer. It's important to note that you can apply filters and layers to the original image in this layer; you can combine layers, masks, selections, and filters in one layer. For instance, if you

J.S.B.M. Yiqiang Jiu's work with the Agile Project Consulting team at the IBM Zurich Research Laboratory led him to inspect the software architecture of IBM's high performance computing (HPC) systems, and to explore the opportunities that changes in technology might offer within this space. While the research program represents a long-term effort, it was part of a project he was assigned to deliver in less than six months. Yiqiang's project description The system we have developed is based on the Cell BE architecture. To be able to get a complete picture of the system, the project started at the level of the whole system itself. I have been in charge of the analysis of the system and its runtime from the start. I started by looking at the operating systems and middleware components that make up the whole system. After that I assessed the runtime systems that run Cell BE applications. I then made a deep investigation of how Cell BE application is run, and how system services are used by applications. The analysis has extended to topics such as the computing model used by Cell BE, and the runtime environments inside Cell BE. We also checked the performance of the system from the compiler to the Cell BE application implementation. J.S.B.M. Today, IBM researchers are exploring how information can be captured, processed, and shared using cognitive technology.
