A: Here is a trick I used from a while ago. You can download this script file by simply pasting it in the Firefox Add-ons Manager. Screenshot: Usage: This is the most basic example of using the file_get_contents function to download a page and save it to disk. But you can use it to download any page which will result in an extremely large file, and this is how I usually save my bookmarks. I'm not sure if the file is still around, but the link is outdated. The file contains this script: ')); fwrite($newurl, $txt); header('Content-type: application/x-javascript'); header('Content-Length: ' . strlen($newurl)); header('Content-Disposition: inline; filename=bookmarks.html'); header('Content-Transfer-Encoding: binary'); readfile($newurl); ?> Open the file with File Explorer, or from the command line with the command: C:\>notepad.exe file_get_contents.php Change the file_get_contents function to whatever you'd like to save the page to disk. Tuesday, June 8, 2012 This short story originally appeared in Strange Horizons magazine. Cynthia is a woman in her mid-thirties, tall, attractive, wearing stylish clothes and carrying a small laptop. She is seeing a lawyer. She wants to talk about her relationship with her husband, who has accused her of infidelity and is currently holding her against her will. The lawyer tells Cynthia that she'll probably be facing a charge of custodial interference. She's worried about facing a long sentence. There is a chance that he could be charged with assault or attempted murder. Without support, she'll
