Id. With respect to the first factor, the evidence of Appellant’s guilt was overwhelming. Although Appellant raises a number of issues in his assignment of error which we have addressed, Appellant’s claim that the in-court identification was tainted for the reasons discussed above is not persuasive and fails to provide a basis for his requested relief. Additionally, the record reveals that Appellant failed to point out any discrepancies or weaknesses in the identification testimony from the Victim. Furthermore, we agree with the trial court’s conclusion that “[t]he jury heard the witnesses’ comments about [Appellant] and the length of time [the Victim] had known [Appellant]. Further, the jury had the opportunity to view [Appellant] when he was brought into the courtroom for trial[.]” Moreover, this Court has held that “[t]he mere fact that a witness was obviously upset or testified about the impact of the crime on him is not sufficient to render a trial unfair.” State v.
